“What if I came back to life?” asks this character forgotten at the bottom of the mirror. In front of him, another actor has aged, one dressing room at a time, embellishing his intimate defeat, his worn-out hopes, this disappointment that casts a shadow over his days. So many things have died in him that life would not be long enough to forget them. But today he is listening to the voices inside the mirror and it’s as if the soul had brought him back to his body. In this sterile present in which man does not seem to live up to his dreams, with his last forces, he will go out on stage to irradiate hope. Together with his character, he will stir with his sieve the entrails of the theatre, stumbling upon its vices and its virtues, always with his humanity. They will descend to hell, cross labyrinths, illuminate the dark galleries where vulgarity floods everything; they will escape from the world and its opportunities...defying death and oblivion; they will look for the joy of the reencounter with the theatre.” Eusebio Calonge

With its original theatrical universe, Zaranda. Teatro Inestable de Ninguna Parte is one of the most important theatre companies in Spain, and one of the best known internationally. With a 45-year career (Jerez de la Frontera, 1978) it continues to do what it knows best: good plays that make the audience reflect on a reality, namely the point where a future which has not yet arrived meets a past that is always present thanks to memory.
