“Pan looks in the window of those who risk growing up. For fairy godmothers, no longer believing in them is like letting leaves fall into oblivion. It is stopping to fly. What happens when we let ourselves go in the railroad coaches of the past? What happens when we our dreams in order and everything turns into a permanent autumn? Our version of J. M. Barrie’s story focuses on the need to be once again, not on the recollection of what we were..

Our Neverland island is an abandoned amusement park. A huge roller-coaster anchored in the past, covered by an autumn rain. Everything is covered by a mantle of dry leaves. A faded sign. Rusty rides. Frozen laughter. Recollections of adventures that want to come back but don’t know how. Our coach and forgotten slides will be an
